

HUMAN JOBS

Inclusive Employment for Youth

Project Number: 2022-2-PL01-KA220-YOU-000098517

The HUMAN JOBS project seeks to support NEETS (not in education, employment, or training) and those with slight physical disabilities to find fulfilling roles in the humanities sector. In this newsletter, we explore the types of humanities roles available in Ireland, one of the project countries.

From cultural preservation to creative innovation, the humanities sector is playing a crucial role in shaping Ireland's future. The humanities sector in Ireland has been experiencing remarkable growth in recent years. With a rich cultural heritage and a deep appreciation for arts, literature, history, and philosophy, Ireland is a natural hub for humanities-related careers.

Ireland's commitment to preserving its cultural heritage has led to a surge in jobs related to museums, archives, and cultural institutions. Professionals in these fields work diligently to safeguard Ireland's historical treasures and ensure they remain accessible to future generations.

The creative arts, including literature, music, and the performing arts, continue to thrive in Ireland. Writers, musicians, actors, and artists contribute to the country's vibrant cultural scene, attracting international recognition.

To continue to support the humanities sector in Ireland, we recommend the following policy approaches:

- Establish comprehensive skills development and training programs tailored to the needs of NEETs interested in humanities-related fields. These programs should include both formal education and vocational training.
- Offer financial incentives, such as scholarships, stipends, or subsidies, to encourage NEETs to enrol in these programs. Create partnerships with private sector organisations to fund training initiatives.
- Provide financial support to employers who hire NEETs as interns or apprentices, either through wage subsidies or tax incentives, to make it more appealing for organisations to participate.

The Human Jobs team has selected a snapshot of humanities jobs available to NEETs and people with slight physical disabilities, including:
